"Be kind and compassionate to one another, forgiving each other, just as in Christ God forgave you" (Ephesians 4:32).

Do you know someone who has done something so bad to you that you think you could never forgive them? You would rather just ignore them than have to face them. You avoid them and can't even look at them when you pass by them. How do you think Joseph felt when he came face to face with his brothers again?

OK," Mrs. Andrews, the teacher, began, "picture this. It's a hot, hot day. Hot and VERY dry. So dry that the moisture just seems to be sucked right out of your skin.

"Joseph looks up from the documents he has been sealing. He looks out at the line of people waiting to buy grain. People are coming to Egypt from all over the world, it seems. And the line gets longer every day.

"Joseph stands up, signaling to his assistants that he is going to take a break. He gazes out again over the weary, travel-stained strangers. Suddenly he squints in disbelief. There is a group of men out there near the end of the line who look very familiar. They look a lot like his 10 older brothers. They are his 10 older brothers!

"Now," Mrs. Andrews asked, "how do you think Joseph felt?"

"He was probably shocked," Marianne answered.

"I don't know about that," Matthew added. "If people from all over the world were coming to buy grain, maybe he sort of expected that his brothers would show up."

"That's a good thought," Mrs. Andrews said. "In fact, maybe he did believe they would show up, because of the dream he had when he was a teenager. Remember his dream in which Joseph and his brothers were tying up bundles of grain? Joseph's bundle stood up, and his brothers' bundles gathered around and bowed before it."

"I'll bet he felt like getting even with his brothers!" Brian said.

"What could Joseph have done to them?" Mrs. Andrews asked.

"Well, he could have refused to sell them grain and sent them home to starve. Or he could have put them in prison forever. Or he could even have killed them," Brian answered.

"Joseph certainly had the power to do whatever he wanted to them," Trevor said. "After all, they sold him to be a slave. It was like kidnapping."

"That's true," Mrs. Andrews agreed. "Justice would have been served if Joseph had put his brothers in prison or even sold them as slaves. But Joseph believed that God was leading in his life. Listen to what he told them. 'Don't be angry with yourselves that you did this to me, for God did it. He sent me here to keep you and your families alive so that you will become a great nation.' (See Genesis 45:5-8.) I think Joseph could forgive the great wrongs his brothers committed because he could see God working in his life."

"And Joseph loved God," Trevor added. "And when we really love God, don't we become more like Him? So maybe Joseph wanted to forgive his brothers because God always forgives us."

Mrs. Andrews smiled her special smile. The one that covered her face when she was especially pleased with what someone had said. "I think you've stated a really important point," she said. "Joseph forgave his brothers; he gave them food; he gave them a home in Egypt, and he took care of them all during the famine. Joseph's forgiving attitude does make one think of God, doesn't it?"

"But consider this. Do you think Joseph's brothers really felt forgiven?"

The class was quiet.

Marianne raised her hand. "No, I don't," she said. "Because when their father Jacob died, they were afraid that Joseph would finally get even with them."

"I think that's what happens with us sometimes too," Mrs. Andrews said. "Sometimes we just can't believe that God has really forgiven us. Will somebody please read Genesis 50:21 for us?"

"I've got it," Matthew said. "'So then, don't be afraid. I will provide for you and your children.' And he reassured them and spoke kindly to them."

Trevor waved his arm. He waved both his arms in the air. "I know! I know what you're going to say!" he exclaimed. "You're going to say that this story is in the Bible to help us get a better picture of God and how He treats us!"

Mrs. Andrews walked down the aisle and gave Trevor a high five. "You're absolutely right!" she said. "That's exactly what I was going to say!"
